

Title Srijan : An Aesthetic Empowerment

Objective:

This practice is intended to showcase the talent of the students of the drawing and painting department to earn while they learn. At the same time, this event provides them a platform to sell their masterpieces.

Context:

most of our students are from a poor economic background and conservative families. It is almost impossible for them to outside Agra or organize an art exhibition to showcase their art. Keeping this in mind, the drawing and painting department decided to organize an art exhibition for their students.

The Practice:

This this department of drawing and painting started this practice and named it Srijan, an aesthetic expression. they started it with the vision of showcasing the talent of their students as well as to offer them a platform where they can earn some money through the sale of their paintings. They invite eminent guests from the field of arts to inaugurate the function in order to encourage the students are bought by these guests, visitors to the exhibition and faculty members from other departments.

Evident of success-

Appreciation with a critical approach provides and inside to these young artist in this field. they gives their views on the paintings exhibited and share their experiences when they ventured into the job market after Completing college. An increase in the sales from 10,000 to 1,00,000 is in itself a proof of the success of this practice.

Title of the practice : Gift Green

Objective -

This practice is an initiative taken by all the students and stop members of Baikunthy college suggested by Sanjeevani eco club, the objective is to sensitize people about the need of the hour that is to protect and conserve nature.

The context -

We have a green campus with three good lawns and a number of indoor outdoor plants in earthen pots. Every year especially during rainy season we have lots of baby plants off shooting from parent plants like snake plants, spider plants bryophyllum, aloevera etc ,which if not plucked go waste and affect the growth of the main plant.

The members of the eco club turned this problem into a pool of plant samplings and started the new practice of gifting plants to all the chief guests who were invited to the college on different event are programmes.

Evidence of success:

This practice was soon followed by the students without even asking them to do so they started gifting each other green plants and birthdays not only the students but the faculty members of the college have also inculcated the habit of getting plants on birthdays, anniversary and festivals. We also use stones and conifer cones as paper weight on our tables, earthen pen holders. Problems Encountered and Resources Required.

We encountered no problems and no resources were needed except a few earthen pots.

This practice brought a phenomenal change in sensitizing community, students and visitors to the college on the need of plantation.
